Excerpt: . . . You must first look at the necessities of the case and after that its usefulness. So that dock was built and I have been in favor of docks ever since, and whenever there is a place that ought to be built up, as docks in the city of New York, I am in favor of then and although I have not the eloquence of a Van Wyck, I have some knowledge of the subject because I have been practicing it and carrying the stuff on barges nearly all my life, and I know that this is right, I know that that canal should be built for the interest of you and for the interest of the people of this great city and of this whole State. (Applause. ) Now, gentlemen, there are other people who wish to be heard and I am sure that with the business ability that lies in the commissioners that we are addressing here today that our case is safe. I have been before commissions when I did not think the case was safe: I did not think the men were broad enough, but we have now broad-minded men, and I say it with truth and with knowledge. I have known every dock commissioner for the last forty years, I have been on speaking terms with them and have helped them get things when I could, and I have known the Superintendents of Public Works and I have known the...
